Most good plumbing contractors and heater manufacturers tell you to drain hot water heaters at least once per year. This is why. How many people do you know who drain and clear their hot water tanks per that advice? It's even printed on a sticker on mine.

No surprise, here.

Wasn't sure if this you tube video post of someone draining an East Chicago hot water tank had been circulated here. Apparently they had never drained a hot water tank before and were aghast at the water color (surprisingly no sediment though). According to the sampling results the water contained 680 ppb lead.

Didn't know if the agency wanted to explain water heaters to the producers. This morning they have nearly 50K views.
